About the Book of the Month: This collection of featured books is from Books Matter: The Best Kid Lit on Bias, Diversity and Social Justice. The books teach about bias and prejudice, promote respect for diversity, encourage social action and reinforce themes addressed in education programs of A World of Difference® Institute, ADL's international anti-bias education and diversity training provider. For educators, adult family members and other caregivers of children, reading the books listed on this site with your children and incorporating them into instruction are excellent ways to talk about these important concepts at home and in the classroom.

The Ninth Night of Hanukkah
Erica S. Perl (Author), Shahar Kober (Illustrator)

It's Hanukkah, and Max and Rachel are excited to light the menorah in their family's new apartment. But unfortunately, their Hanukkah box is missing. So now they have no menorah, candles, dreidels, or, well, anything! Luckily, their neighbors are happy to help, offering thoughtful and often humorous stand-in items each night. And then, just as Hanukkah is about to end, Max and Rachel, inspired by the shamash ("helper") candle, have a brilliant idea: they're going to celebrate the Ninth Night of Hanukkah as a way to say thanks to everyone who's helped them!

Hanukkah-Related Words

Dreidel: A four-sided spinning top, each side marked with a different Hebrew letter, played during Hanukkah.

Gelt: Money; on Hanukkah, many people give children chocolate gelt, chocolate coins wrapped in gold or silver foil.

Latkes: Potato pancakes often served during Hanukkah; the oil they are fried in symbolizes the oil that miraculously provided light for eight days.

Menorah: A special candleholder; a Hanukkah menorah has nine candlesticks, one for each night of the festival plus an extra one to light the others.

Shamash: The "helper" candle that is used to light the other lights, usually set apart from the other candles.

Discussion Questions

Before reading the book aloud, ask some or all of these pre-reading questions:

- What and who do you see on the cover of the book?
- What is the title of the book, and what do you think it means? What do you know about Hanukkah?
- Who or what do you think the book might be about?

As you read the book aloud, ask a few discussion questions periodically throughout reading to check for comprehension and keep the students engaged. Below are some sample questions that correlate to specific page numbers.

- What is Mom looking for? (Page 5)
- What is the gelt in the book made of? (Page 15)
- What idea do Rachel and Max have about the ninth night of Hanukkah? (Page 23)

After reading the book aloud, ask some or all of the following discussion questions:

- What happens in the story?
- How do Rachel and Max feel when they can’t find their Hanukkah things?
What are some of the ways that their family has to improvise (to make or create something by using whatever is available) because they don’t have their usual Hanukkah items? Have you ever had to do something like that?

How did the family’s new neighbors help them celebrate Hanukkah?

Have you ever had neighbors help you with something like that? Please explain.

How do Max and Rachel feel about their neighbors helping them out? How do you know?

What did the family learn about their neighbors? How are their neighbors different from them? How are they similar?

While reading the book, what did you learn about Hanukkah that you didn’t know before?

How did you feel when the book ended?

Why do you think the book is called The Ninth Night of Hanukkah?

Why do you think the author wrote this book?

Extension Activities
Below are activities for students that can extend learning from the book.

1. Imagine and Draw/Write What Happens Next
   Have students imagine and draw/write what happens next in the book. First, remind them how the book ends by re-reading pages 28-31 and then ask students: What happens at the end of the book? Remind students that the family finds their box with all their Hanukkah items and then on the ninth night, they celebrate Hanukkah with their new neighbors and friends. Ask students: What do you think happens next after their neighbors leave? What do you think will happen when Max, Rachel and their parents run into their neighbors in the building? How do you think the family will celebrate Hanukkah next year? Have students imagine what might happen if the book continues for a few more pages by letting them think and write some thoughts/ideas on their own and then engage in brainstorming of ideas as a class. Then, have them draw and/or write another page or two of the book as they imagine the book continuing. When completed, students can share their pages with the rest of the class by posting them on the wall and moving around the room gallery-style to see all the ways in which students imagined the story continuing. You can also invite parents and family members in for a whole class reading of the book and include the students’ additional pages.

2. Learning about Hanukkah
   In the book, Rachel, Max and their family celebrate Hanukkah. Ask students: What did you already know about Hanukkah? What did you learn about Hanukkah traditions by reading the book (e.g., lighting candles, exchanging presents, eating latkes and sofguniyot (jelly doughnuts), playing dreidel, singing, etc.)? If they don’t already know, explain to students that Hanukkah is a festival celebrated by Jewish people and celebrates the victory of the Jewish people over another group of people who were treating them unjustly. It is often called the “Festival of Lights” because Hanukkah is celebrated with the lighting of the Hanukkah menorah (also called a hanukkiyah) for eight nights, commemorating a miracle that happened during this time, where just one day’s supply of oil allowed the menorah in the Temple to remain lit for eight days. Ask students: Does your family celebrate holidays and if so, what holidays do they celebrate? What are some of the things you do during those holidays? Elicit from students the traditions are often part of those holidays which may include family activities, food, games, gift giving, songs, stories, etc. Have students go home and talk with their parents/family members about their holiday traditions. You can also have students learn more about Hanukkah, the origin of the holiday and how different people celebrate it by engaging them in a research project. Here are some online resources they can begin with from My Jewish Learning, PJ Library and Kids Britannica.

3. Neighbors and Helping
Remind students that in the book, Rachel, Max and their family have just moved to a new building. Because they can’t find their Hanukkah items, they have to substitute or improvise. The family gets assistance from their new neighbors and friends who help them celebrate Hanukkah, but in a somewhat different way than they usually do. Ask students: What is a neighbor? Explain that a neighbor is a person who lives next to or near another person. Remind students that in school, we sometimes refer to someone’s “neighbor” to describe a student who sits next to another student. Read aloud the third paragraph of the Author’s Note on page 31 which says, “Like the shamash (the “helper candle”), individual people have the power to spark change and brighten the lives of those around them.” Elicit from students how neighbors or others have helped them and brightened their lives and the ways they do or have done that for others. Ask students: Who are your neighbors? Do you know them well, somewhat or not at all? Explain that neighbors can be people who live next door, in the same building or who live close by. Their neighbors can include those who live there and those who work in stores or businesses in their neighborhood. Have students write a short essay (or create a drawing) about one of their neighbors, especially someone who, like the shamash helper candle, has “sparked change and brightened their lives.” They can call the drawing or essay “My Neighbor” and when these are completed, shared with the class.
